

ABSTRACT

A low-leakage enclosure for cryogenic compressor apparatus includes climate control equipment and guide fixtures to direct ultra-cold coolant lines to a superconducting utility power transformer. The self-contained system maintains the required number of high performance chillers within a narrow temperature range to ensure reliable operation in an unprotected outdoor environment. The enclosure advances the technology of superconducting power systems closer to final deployable status.